THE SENIOR CLASS
Pocahontas High
Pocahontas, Virginia

Tazewell County Public Library

Foreword

As this, the last year of high school for the 1950 graduating class draws to a close, it is with joy and just a touch of sadness that we send this annual to press. It is our sincere hope that in the future it will serve as a reminder of the days we have spent at Pocahontas High School. With this thought in mind, we present THE TOMAHAWK, 1950.

Senior Class Prophecy

The other day as I lay sleeping in class, I had a dream of the future. In my dream the bold, dashing sheriff of Pocahontas, Edward Adams, and the Constable of Machine Shop Hollow, William Milliner, were after a lone bandit, who had robbed the Pocahontas National Bank. Charles Ferrell, president of the bank, had offered a reward of five thousand dollars to anyone who could apprehend the bandit. Miss Sophia Rebekovich, secretary of the bank, identified the bandit as a small man with yellow complexion, a sharp face and a squeaky voice. I purchased an evening paper and read Miss Bonnie Swimm's column covering the developments of the robbery. Detective Billy Arrington had several leads on the help up, but he could not get Billy Eskut, a service station owner, to identify the licenses on the get-away car. Eskut smiled and said, "I just can't say."

Just then, Terry Kitts came down the street and was nabbed as the bandit. He said this was one of his practical jokes. Besides, he put the money in the bank's wastepaper basket.

After all of this excitement, I went to a movie. In the newsreel, I saw Miss Barbara Fowler, a ballet dancer, now on tour in France. Next, President of the United States, James Baily, made his "State of the Union" address. (He was the first president under 35 years of age.) He was followed with speeches from Vice-President John Barbour and Secretary of State James Baker. Then Harrison "John L." Welch, president of the U.M. W.A., made the promise of a new contract within a week. He also blasted the new labor law, which was drawn up by Senator Jimmy Rose.

Finally, it was time for the main feature. After the love making scene between Bonnie "Devine" French and Jack "Playboy" Sisk, I became bored and went out on the street. On the corner stood Harry Houston and Harold Bledsoe, the two radio stars, playing on their guitars a famous ballad, "Mule Train." After paying my regards, I went to the Pocahontas Hotel.

At the hotel, I was served dinner by a nice looking waitress, who was none other than Miss Odessa Yost. I then went up to my room to watch the television. I tuned it in to Gene "Harry James" Totri, who was playing his hot trumpet to the tune of "Sugar Blues." Afterwards, I listened to Wayne Gillespie's Sports Review. He told of Crockett Murphy's All-American triumph and what a fine job Jimmy Sanderson, Coach of Duke, was doing. Also, he told how Tommy Welch, the passing ace, had spurred S.M.U. to its tenth straight win. He then told of Elwood Sluss and Buddy Young signing professional basketball contracts.

I then turned the set to the Old Maid's Convention. On the front seats sat Grace Wheeler and Fannie Williams. Miss Patsy Crockett was guest of honor, having just returned from a singing tour in Europe. She was very dignified as most obese ladies are. Then Miss Betty Lou Fern told of her heart breaking experience in love and her hatred for men.

Becoming bored by statistics of marriages, I tuned in to a quiz program. The contestants were of various professions. The first, Roy Shupe, a space flyer, won an atomic motorcycle. The next contestant, Patricia Franklin, a secretary of Standard Oil Company, won a set of silverware. She and Roy then left arm in arm. Miss Delphia Bentley Bolen won a trip up the Amazon, which she called a "delayed honeymoon." Then Mrs. Margaret Pressley Collins received the Housewife of the Year Award. Donald Hess, the announcer, then signed off.

Picking up the paper I read where Ted Stone had received a contract with Underwood Typewriter Company. Curtis Howard had received a contract with International Masons. (Incidentally, he was building a new China Wall.) Then I read where a former school teacher, Miss Louise Jones, had signed a contract with M.G.M. to star in a new version of "Gone With the Wind."

Just then, someone slapped me on the back. As I awoke, I heard them say, "That's the laziest boy I have ever seen. That's what he'll be doing ten years from now, lying around sleeping."

HERMAN SHRADER, Prophet.

Declaring this to be our last will and testament — we bid you an affectionate FAREWELL!!!
